

CHARIS[®] WORLD OUTREACH

Changing lives by establishing Bible schools throughout the world

CARRYING THE TORCH

We're going to equip and raise up leaders who will impact lives, nations, and generations.

For years, Charis Bible College has used a forty-hour Third-Year elective to train future directors of Charis campuses and Andrew Wommack Ministries offices. But that wasn't always the case. Many current and past directors didn't have the benefit of any specific instruction. They launched out into the deep with nothing more than a vision from God and a fire in their hearts. Many were successful. Some weren't.

Carrie Pickett, the director of Charis's new Third-Year World Outreach Global Training School, wants to see that change. She believes thorough preparation is the answer to greater success rates out in the field. "We've been so blessed in the past that we've just gotten really good people," Carrie says. "But forty hours is just not enough time to teach a person how to be a director or to train them properly for the depth of vision they are entering."

The new Third-Year World Outreach Global Training School, which begins this fall, is designed to provide the comprehensive instruction needed to both plant and sustain a successful Charis campus and/or AWM office location. Still, Carrie makes it clear that the school is not for just any Charis graduate: "This track is a specialized program for those who have a call to continue the legacy of Charis Bible College and Andrew Wommack Ministries."

Launching a new Charis campus or AWM office is a four-step process, and those graduates who desire to be directors or support members of a campus can expect to go through all four phases.

Phase one is the Global Training School itself. After successful completion of the school, a student will go through an interview process and enter phase two where they are placed into an internship program.

During the internship, which lasts a full school year, the student will learn the day-to-day nuts and bolts of what it takes to run a Charis campus and AWM office.

Phase three is where the student will seed the ground in the location of a proposed new campus or office. He or she will start a local Discipleship Evangelism program or Charis Bible Study and begin building relationships with local ministers and pastors. Phase three is also when translation efforts will start (where applicable) for Charis curriculum and AWM materials.

In phase four, the student will undertake the legal process of establishing the AWM office or Charis campus. The student will also be responsible for locating suitable office and/or school space and for beginning marketing efforts to open the new location.

To ensure that students are well-prepared for a directorship role, the Global Training curriculum includes courses in organizational and time management, team building, communication, conflict resolution, world religions, discipling nations, and much more. The school is also partnering with some of Charis's other Third-Year tracks, ensuring that future directors receive vital cross-training in business, ministry, government, and media. Students will also receive training from executive leadership across both AWM and Charis.

Carrie says the passion behind Global Training is to carry on Andrew's vision to reach as far and deep with the Gospel as possible. The new school will help accomplish that vision by training leaders who will carry the torch:

We're going to equip and train up leaders who will impact lives, nations, and generations, so that long after they're gone, what they're doing is still lasting. By training and mobilizing leaders with Global Training, we're going to teach them how to have a legacy within a nation on the platform of Charis Bible College and Andrew Wommack Ministries. I think that's amazing.

By partnering with Charis Bible College World Outreach, you are helping train leaders who are establishing Charis campuses and AWM offices around the world. Your partnership is taking the unconditional love and grace of God to the nations. Thank you for all you do!
